Welcome to August, I mean May, and the beginning of summer! There is not too much to report on the new technology front since we are in the lull between Christmases.

First off, though, is the announcement by Microsoft for Windows Blue which will possibly be out for public review (Beta) at the Build Conference at the end of June. To see what improvements/changes they have made to Windows 8: <http://bit.ly/13tBPLt> and http://news.cnet.com/8301-10805\_3-57583262-75/whats-new-about-windows-blue-faq/

Google glass was released to the public recently with mixed feelings. People that have been testing it say they like it but feel awkward using it when doing voice commands. Also there are a lot of establishments that are banning Google glass already because of its camera capability. <http://reviews.cnet.com/google-glass/>

If you have ever thought about doing 3D printing, Staples will now start selling the Cube 3D Printer in their stores. It is $1299.99, plus the glue and cartridges of material. Targus has released a touch pen system that hooks up to your USB port and uses infrared and ultrasonic signals to track where the pen is on the screen so that you can make any Windows 8 laptop into a touch-like system. <http://www.popsci.com/gadgets/gallery/2013-04/goods-may-2013s-hottest-gadgets?image=10>
